The coupon bill, of 1871-2, was based upon an erroneous estimate

It would be impossible for taxation is as great as the resources and business of Virginia can bear without an oppression which would re-act upon values. The expenses of the government are, approximately, as small as they can be made without impairing its efficiency, and yet there is an annual deficit of about one-half, in the payment of interest. All classes of the debt stand upon exactly the same footing as to the payment of interest at the Treasury, out of moneys collected—the consols are the superior investment because the coupons are receivable for all clues to the State. The coupons now over-due are in excess of the entire revenue for any one year. If all the taxes were paid in moneys, the government would cease to exist from want of funds to support it; if some taxes—notably by the large foreign corporations, who have obtained Virginia's interests in the railroads for a mere song—are paid in coupons, purchased at an opposition to present the redeemed bonds and demand a settlement with West Virginia, or the United States.

If pursuing the policy indicated, or any other and better, should result in the finding of the entire debt undeavoid strengths and the principal upon which she should pay interest, and had steadily applied her revenues to the purchase of the bonds on the market, there would have been but little interest-bearing debt left now, and Virginia would be berger bill; should destroy discated, or any other and better, should result in the finding of the entire debt undeavoid destroy discated, or any other and better, should result in the finding of the entire debt undeavoid the payment of size of the solution to present the redeemed bonds and deamed as estlement with West Virginia, or the United States.
